Miraculous Prayer to the Little Flower

*O Little flower of Jesus, ever consoling troubled souls with heavenly graces, in our unflinching intercessions I place my confident trust. From the heart of our Divine Savior, petition the blessings of which I stand in greatest need.....Shower upon me your promised roses of virtue and grace, Dear St. Therese, so that swiftly advancing in sanctity and perfect love of neighbor, I may someday receive the crown of life eternal.
Amen*

Renowned climate scientist blasts ‘anticapitalist’ climate agenda, ‘manufactured’ consensus

Climatologist Judith Curry warned of a ‘climate change industry set up to reward alarmism’ and crush oil companies

Andreas Wailzer (LifeSiteNews, Aug. 11, 2023) — A renowned climatologist has said that the alleged scientific consensus on “climate change” is a “manufactured consensus” perpetuated by the United Nations (U.N.). In an interview with libertarian journalist and pundit John Stossel, climatologist Judith Curry said that the “manufactured consensus” existed because a scientist would achieve “fame and fortune” for exaggerating the risks associated with “climate change.”

‘I don’t believe there is a climate crisis’ Curry, who formerly served as the chair of the School of Earth & Atmospheric Sciences at the Georgia Institute of Technology, admitted that she used to spread alarmism about “climate change” herself. “We found that the percent of Category 4 and 5 hurricanes had doubled,” says Curry. “And so, this was picked up by the media. Alarmists said, ‘Oh, here’s the way to do it: Tie extreme weather events to global warming!’”

Curry said that she became a darling of the mainstream media due to her study tying the alleged increase in intense hurricanes to global warming. She was “flown all over the place to meet with politicians, and give these talks and [received] lots of media attention.” “I was adopted by the environmental advocacy groups and the alarmists, and I was treated like a rockstar,” Curry recalled.

When researchers pointed out incongruities in her research, namely years with fewer hurricanes, Curry investigated these claims and realized that her critics had a point. “Part of it was bad data. Part of it is natural climate variability,” she told Stossel. The journalist seemed pleasantly surprised about Curry’s integrity and willingness to be corrected. “So you are the unusual researcher who looks at the criticism of your paper and actually concluded they had a point.”

Curry said that the 2009 “Climategate” scandal, in which internal emails from research facilities showed that scientists were trying to hide controversial data, showed “a lot of really ugly things,” like “avoiding Freedom of Information Act requests” and “trying to get journal editors fired from their job” if they disagreed with the mainstream “climate change” paradigm. Stossel said the Climategate scandal made Curry realize that there is “a climate-change industry set up to reward alarmism.”

“The origins go back to the U.N. environmental program,” she recalled. Curry said that U.N. officials were motivated by “anti-capitalism. They hated the oil companies and seized on the climate change issue to move their policies along.”

According to the climatologist, that was the reason that the U.N. created the Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change (IPCC). “The IPCC wasn’t supposed to focus on any benefits of warming,” instead “the IPCC’s mandate was to look for dangerous human-caused climate change,” she said. “Then the national funding agencies directed all the funding...assuming there are dangerous impacts.”

Curry explained that to receive public funding, scientists must follow the climate alarmism narrative. “The announcements of opportunity for funding are really tied to assuming that there are dangerous impacts [of climate change],” Curry stated. “So the researchers aren’t stupid; they know what they need to say to get funding?” Stossel asked. “Exactly,” Curry replied.

The former faculty head recalled that “about ten years ago,” the editor of the prestigious academic journal Science, Dr. Marcia McNutt, “wrote this political rant about ‘we need to stop emissions now,’” in which she stated that “The time for debate has ended.” McNutt now serves as the President of the National Academy of Science. “What kind of message does that give?” Curry asked. “‘Promote the alarming papers! Don’t even send the other ones out for review.’ If you wanted to advance in your career, like be at a prestigious university and get a big salary, have big laboratory space, get lots of grant funding, be director of an institute, there was clearly one path to go.” “That’s what we’ve got now: a massive government-funded climate alarmism complex,” Stossel said.

“Why don’t other scientists who recognize the nonsense push back?” the journalist asked Curry. “If they work at a university, it’s going to be very uncomfortable for them,” she responded. Curry said that she could no longer get a job at a university after her stint at the Georgia Institute of Technology because she was labeled a “climate denier.” That is why the climatologist started her own weather and climate forecasting company called Climate Forecast Applications Network. Curry also publishes articles on her blog and has written multiple books, including her latest work, “Climate Uncertainty and Risk: Rethinking Our Response.”

Catholic priest calls on Arizona Gov. Katie Hobbs to 'immediately repent' of promoting abortion PHOENIX, Arizona (LifeSiteNews, July 25, 2023) – Fr. Craig Friedley, the pastor of Our Lady of Guadalupe Parish in Queen Creek, Arizona, penned a letter to pro-abortion Arizona Gov. Katie Hobbs "for advancing a method to abort a child that disregards the safety of women beyond what she has done in the past." Fr. Friedley wrote in response to an announcement of a measure expanding access to over-the-counter contraceptives —many of which are abortifacients —without a doctor's prescription. Friedley took the Democrat to task for her long-standing promotion of abortion up until birth under the guise of advocating for "women's health," saying her latest move "is not only immoral, but it means that you are placing your eternal soul in danger of damnation by your public, proud, and scandalous actions in supporting the murder of children in the womb." Friedley reminded Hobbs, who is Catholic, "You should immediately repent and go to confession for advocating for abortion in the public square. The murder of a child in the womb is not health care. Stop spreading this lie and causing a scandal in the Catholic Church. If you are still attending any Catholic Mass, you should refrain from presenting yourself for communion until you repent of spreading lies and advocating for the murder of children in the womb."
